The Loloh Gadang Collection

The Balinese have a collection of healthy drinks called loloh, while the Javanese version is called Jamu. These tonics are mixed from leaves, herbs, and roots that are known to have health benefits. In ancient Bali, writings and stories tell that traditionally loloh was only drunk by member of the royal family. They are extremely refreshing and attached to Ubud's day to day living.

Loloh Kecemcem

Kecemcem leaves, lemon, honey, coconut water
One of the tropical plants used as a traditional beverage in Bali is Kecemcem or Cemcem (Spondiaspinnata) or in Indonesian called Kedondong Hutan. Empirically, the beverage is mentioned for treating coughs, increasing appetite, and body refreshment.

Loloh Kepiduh

Kepiduh leaves, lemon, honey, coconut water
This plant has great efficacy to rejuvenate brain cells and enhance memorization skills.

Loloh Bluntas

Bluntas leaves, lemon, honey, coconut water
Bluntas is wild plant that is easy to find in Bali, usually in villages where it is often used as a natural fence. This plant contains several beneficial agents, such as phosphor, essential oil, magnesium, tannin, calcium and natrium. In China, it is known as Luan Yi, and is also used for medication, while in England it is referred to as marsh fleabane. In Bali we make a herbal drink called loloh beluntas that is effective in increasing appetite and reducing fever.
The taste is a mixture of bitter and sour.

Loloh Kayu Manis

Kayumanis leaves, lemon, honey, coconut water
One of the wild plant used as a herbal beverage and has several beneficial such as digestive problem, body refreshment and prompt recoveries.
