DID YOU KNOW?

The tea plant, Thea Sinensis, comes from Asia and is part of the camellia family, Camellia Sinensis. In its wild state, it is a tree that can grow quite tall. When constantly pruned, it remains a bush that produces pointed young buds.

It is these young buds that are the source of tea. The tea plant requires a warm, wet climate and well-drained soil. It grows well at altitudes up to 9,000 feet.

Like vintage wines, each tea crop reflects local characteristics - the nature of the soil, the climate, the amount of sun and rain, the time of plucking.

All teas come from the same plant but will deliver varied results fitting into one of five major categories: White, Green, Oolong, Black, and Pu-erh Tea. Herbal select botanicals and/or fruit infusions are referred to as tisanes.

ORANGE PEKOE

Characterised by long leaves, rolled lengthwise, needle-like.

The plucking takes place once the terminal bud has evolved into a leaf and rarely contains tips

FINE ORANGE PEKOE

This is the finest
Orange Pekoe available

PEKOE

Shorter, less fine leaves
with no tips

PEKOE SOUCHONG

Somewhat coarser leaves

CONGOU

Obtained from the fifth and largest leaf gathered from a shoot tip of a tea plant
